Fairfield Hearing

Ironically, some sounds seeming louder than normal could be a sign of hearing loss.

You may find yourself easily startled by loud noises?
This is common in people with hearing loss.

It can happen because you don't lose all the hair cells in your ear, so a louder sound can trigger the healthy cells to respond more forcefully than they usually would.

If this is ringing (very loud) alarm bells for you, book a free and comprehensive hearing assessment with one of our expert audiologists.

We will help you get your hearing back to normal.

ADAM McVEY

All parties should unite to bring heat and dignity

I was filled with awe last week when MSNBC's Rachel Maddow reported that the Obama administration was planning to launch a new initiative to help the homeless. The news was a welcome sign of the administration's commitment to the homeless, and it was a welcome sign of the administration's commitment to the homeless.

But the news was also a welcome sign of the administration's commitment to the homeless. The news was a welcome sign of the administration's commitment to the homeless. The news was a welcome sign of the administration's commitment to the homeless.

CHILDLINE ADVICE

By Darren Worth,
Childline senior supervisor,
North of England

Online grooming help calls go up after safety bill is delayed

Online grooming help calls to Childline increased by 10 per cent in the last month, according to a report from the charity. The increase comes as the government's Online Safety Bill is delayed, meaning that children will not have the same level of protection as adults.

Childline senior supervisor, Darren Worth, says: 'We are seeing a significant increase in the number of calls we receive about online grooming, and this is a worrying trend.'

Last week, a report from the House of Lords said that the Online Safety Bill is 'incomplete' and 'inadequate'. The bill is expected to be passed in the next few months, but the delay has caused concern among child protection experts.
