The Queen died of old age at 3:10pm. But why did it take more than three hours to tell Harry?

QUEEN ELIZABETH died at Windsor of old age, it was revealed yesterday – the first time a monarch's death certificate is believed to have been made public. But the document also raises intriguing questions, after details of it confirmed that Prince Harry was not informed of his grandmother's death for more than three hours.

Only her two eldest children – Prince Charles and Prince William – were with her when she died at 3:10pm on September 8. Prince Edward and her wife, Sophie, as well as Prince Andrew and Prince William, were all on a plane heading for Scotland at the time and was believed to have been informed mid-air.

'Chaos happens amid personal grief'

Prince Harry, meanwhile, had not even made it to an airport and appeared shaken over whether he should travel up to Aberdeenshire with his wife Meghan. He finally got a private jet from London at 2:30pm, landed at Aberdeen at 4:15pm.

It has already been reckoned by palace sources that his father only managed to confirm his son was safe at 6:15pm – just five minutes before the news was officially confirmed.

Charles had insisted on afternoon on telling his youngest son personally before any official statement was released by Buckingham Palace. He had already seen both Harry and his brother William, earlier in the day to tell them he got up to Scotland in order to qualify his presence at his grandmother's funeral because their grandmother was really ill. He was returned to the Queen's bedside.

But that evening a crucial conversation took place between the queen and Harry taking to the son what is expected to be the most difficult of all situations.

NAME	DATE OF BIRTH	DATE OF DEATH	AGE
Princess Alexandra Mary	15 May 1901	8 September 2010	109 years
Princess Margaret	21 May 1930	20 September 2002	72 years
Princess Anne	15 August 1950	29 August 2009	59 years
Princess Elizabeth	21 April 1926	2 April 2002	76 years
Princess Margaret	21 May 1930	20 September 2002	72 years
Princess Anne	15 August 1950	29 August 2009	59 years
Princess Elizabeth	21 April 1926	2 April 2002	76 years

urgent: Harry finally reaches Aberdeenshire September 8am, right, the death certificate as communication between the prince and his family is uncertain. Family prime minister Lee Thompson informed at 1:15pm. Palace officials declined to comment last night, while other royal sources were unable to explain the discrepancy. But could be stressed that the King does not have a mobile phone and his diary is such that calls between himself and his family usually have to be mediated or 'carefully monitored' by the queen.

to calling staff or even one of his palace lady-in-waiters to try to get an urgent message to him. O'Brien said it was likely the King would be told he was personally, but with his clock looking for the release of his official statement, he simply ran out of time. Another source claimed that the prince was in the family room regularly in touch with Harry any more and that he could also be 'incredibly hard to reach'. Whatever the truth, it highlights the complexity of the relationship between the British royal family and Harry, which now has some distance from the moving altar his grandmother died.

He was not in the UK until the day after the funeral, and was seen publicly at a moment as Windsor with his brother and sister, and at the funeral itself. He was also seen at the vigil. It has also been claimed that, although O'Brien did try to call his son to tell him his grandmother had died, the phone call did not actually go through.

Overtime ban set to bring fresh rail misery

Union to continue action into winter as network grinds to halt again today

by ALASTAIR DALTON

The Rail, Maritime and Transport union (RMT) has stepped up industrial action in its pay dispute with ScotRail by announcing a three-day ban from October 14, as Britain's rail network is decimated today by the biggest strike of the year.

Workers including train conductors and station staff have also been instructed to RMT network on days off, known as rest days, after rejecting a proposal to offer financial benefits.

The move, announced yesterday, comes on top of a one-day strike called by Momentum Scotland, which is expected to affect most routes across the Glasgow area.

The strike today will see only 16 per cent of normal services running, with routes in many areas, Network Rail said.

The RMT said the overtime ban would particularly affect services on Saturdays as it was not part of the current dispute.

It added that the decision to call the strike was a last resort after several months of negotiations.

Not turning: Truss stands firm

Prime Minister Liz Truss - under fire after the fallout from last week's mini-budget - yesterday defended the decision not to publish a forecast from the independent spending watchdog until November.

Royal Mail workers launch 48-hour strike over pay

Postal staff have launched a 48-hour strike over pay, with delivery and sorting staff across the country expected to be affected.

Members of the Royal Mail Communications Union (RCU) are expected to be on strike from 00:01 on Saturday.

The union said it was disappointed that the government had not agreed to a pay rise of 5.5 per cent, which it said was the minimum for the sector.
